ABOUT THE CONFERENCE

This year marks the 5th Annual Tamkin Symposium. The Tamkin gift was bestowed by Dr. Jerome Tamkin and his wife Judith to support the University of California, Irvine College of Medicine Education Program. Thanks to this gift, we are able to dedicate this annual symposium to medical and health care issues presented by speakers who are distinguished in their field. The audience for the Tamkin Symposium is customarily students, faculty, area physicians, business leaders, and other professionals, as well as residents of Orange County and the surrounding area.

Traditionally this day-long symposium has included presentations by eminent speakers, live demonstrations, and panel discussions. Each symposium features a theme of current interest and explores the topic through this day-long event. Past topics were complementary and integrative medicine, the role of humanities in medical education, evaluation in undergraduate medical education, and information technology in medical education.

This year's symposium, entitled "Health Care Disparities: The Latino Experience," will highlight the challenges of delivering quality, culturally-sensitive health care to Latino patients. Distinguished leaders in health care from the State of California, the United States government, and the Orange County area will participate.

In the fall of 2004, UCI College of Medicine will introduce the Program in Medical Education for the Latino Community (PRIME-LC), an innovative approach to train future physicians. This five-year combined Medical Degree/Masters in Environmental Health Science and Policy responds to an increasing demand for physician-leaders who are culturally sensitive and linguistically competent to address the specific needs of Latinos as they become the largest population group in the state. The aim of the program is to improve health care delivery, research and policy in underserved Latino communities.

In addition, this year's symposium will end with an evening event, including dinner at The Sutton Place Hotel, Newport Beach, California.
